Modern Feeding For The Baby

PROBABLY there is no branch of medical science in which more satisfactory progress has been made in recent years than in the feeding of babies. Certainly the proportion of human lives now saved, as compared with former times, is greater in the case of babies than in the case of adults. Many causes have contributed to this gratifying decline of the infant death rate, but no one factor has been so important as has the new knowledge of nutrition applied to infant feeding.

Many of these applications of modern scientific knowledge to infant feeding apply quite as fully and are nearly as beneficial in the case of breast-fed as in the case of bottle-fed babies. The problem of the non-milk foods at weaning time may indeed be more important in the case of the breast-fed infant because of the greater change in its diet at that time than would be the case of the baby already being fed on cows' milk. It should be clearly understood, however, that none of this supplemental feeding is in any way a substitute for milk, but in all cases it is a supplement. Trying to find some other main food than milk for babies takes us back rather to the dark ages of nutrition and the murderous effects of the substitution of starch paste for milk in the patent infant foods of those days.

The fundamental changes in baby feeding belonging to the strictly modern development of nutritional science are for the most part associated with specific nutritional discoveries, and particularly with the vitamins. The oldest and best known and most fully appreciated applications are the use of cod-liver oil for vitamin D and of orange juice and tomato juice for vitamin C.

These products, or some of the more recently developed substitutes that bear the same vitamins, have become widely adopted in feeding infants. The reason for this prompt and general use was the fully demonstrated fact that these vitamins were the specific factors needed to prevent rickets and scurvy, two dreadful diseases which have always taken a wide toll of infant life.

Thus we had the fear of disease as a powerful motive to enforce a revolutionary change of thought and of practice and the adoption of the general belief that infants should be provided with additional specific food substances not supplied in sufficient quantity or with sufficient certainty by the milk. This statement applies whether the milk be from the mother's breast or in the form of cows' milk modified to imitate the mother's milk.

We need not here elaborate the discussion of vitamins D and C. They have both had a vast amount of publicity. The use of cod-liver oil, orange juice and tomato juice in infant feeding are still important and have not been superseded. The original use has rather been elaborated and the procedure varied.

The essential vitamin of cod-liver oil is now to be had from several sources and in several forms. It is the sunshine vitamin. If adequate year-round sun bathing for babies were practical, which it would be only in the most favourable climates, no food source of vitamin D would be needed. As it is we have several sources of this vitamin now available, including cod-liver oil in concentrated tablet form, also halibut liver oil and viosterol. We also have milk and some other foods to which the vitamin D has been added in various ways.

Baby assimilates vital nutriment more quickly from LACTOGEN

Lactogen is pure, fresh, full cream milk with extra cream and natural milk sugar added, rendered, germ free, then modified and dried, and made in all important respects like breast milk by special Lactogen processes which also preserve the natural milk salts and vitamin contents of the milk.

BETTER MILK FOR BABIES

A Schoolgirl Figure After 40

THE exercises are splendid, too, for those who want to take off fat. They are excellent for curing indigestion and for chasing away that feeling of lethargy, that so often envelops one who carries around a burden of fat, and for the woman who is not so young but who has kept her abounding health and vigour.

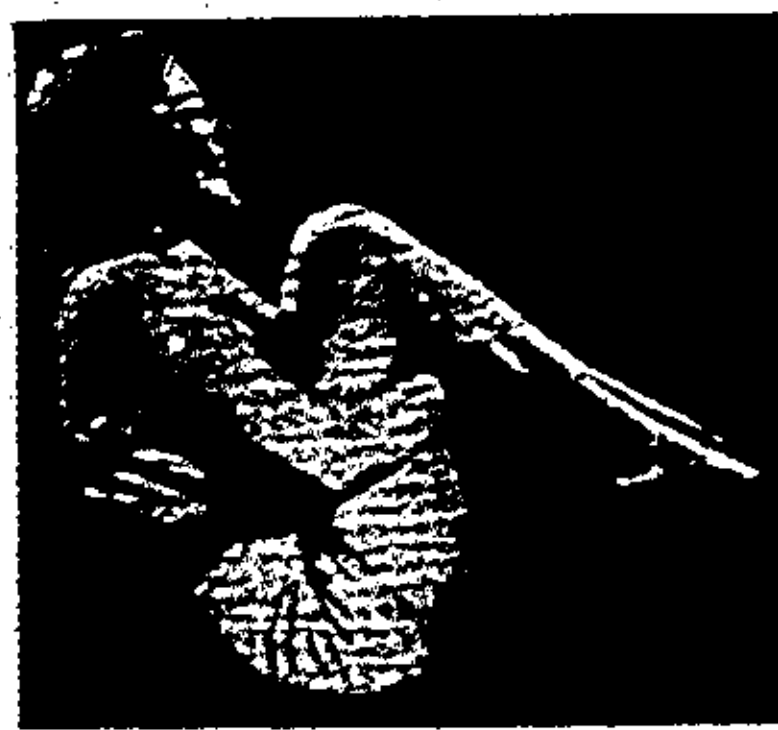

Of course they must be followed faithfully, not intermittently; and with them use common sense in eating and never allow anything to disturb your necessary amount of sleep.

Exercise 1.—Stand with arms at sides. Raise arms and go up on toes. Inhale. Bring arms down as you exhale and come down on feet. Repeat 25 times.

Start with this exercise. It fills the lungs with fresh air and gives the blood-stream a new supply of oxygen.

Exercise 2.—Sit on the floor and bring knees up to the chest. Lock your hands under your knees and rock back and forth as though you were in a rocking chair. Repeat 25 times.

Exercise 3.—This is a real bulimula exercise! Stand with your feet firm about eight inches apart and fold your arms across your chest. Move your abdomen to the right in a circle about 25 times, then to the left, keeping upper body rigid.

Exercise 4.—Stand with knees stiff, feet together. Raise arms over head and bend until your palms are flat on the floor. Repeat 25 times. Also, with knees stiff, touch left foot with right hand, then touch right foot with left hand. Repeat 25 times.

Exercise 5.—If you want to keep your waistline and hips as they should be, add this one. Stand with feet about 12 inches apart. Place hands on hips. Without moving upper torso push hips to the right side, then to the left. Forty times is about right for this exercise.

Exercise 6.—Lie on back, legs straight. Raise left leg and bring it as near outstretched right hand as possible. Do same with right leg and left hand.

Eat plenty of green vegetables and fruit! Don't ever forget your daily walk. Sleep at night and wake up each morning feeling that the day is yours and there is something fine in it for you if you want to look for it.

And have a hobby—anything as long as you enjoy it. It will keep you from becoming settled and feeling that you are about to be pushed into the discard.

Sir Thomas Southorn
Takes Salute

COLOURFUL SCENE IN STATUE SQUARE

His Majesty the King's 70th birthday, which takes place to-day, was celebrated in the Colony this morning with a ceremonial parade at Statue Square, the sun breaking through the clouds after a dismal week-end to enhance the majestic spectacle.

Large crowds watched the ceremony from vantage points along the route and in Statue Square.

HIS MAJESTY RECOVERING FROM SLIGHT CHILL

London, to-day.—His Majesty the King was very much better yesterday and attended Divine Service at the Royal Chapel at Buckingham Palace. — British Wireless Service.

With the exception of the Jubilee Parade, this morning's ceremony is the one event in the year in which practically every Naval, Military and Volunteer unit is represented. ANTI-FASCIST MOVE IN PARIS

500,000 Take Up Stand For Labourers

"CHINA MAIL" SPECIAL Paris, To-day. The disbandment and disarmament of all Fascist bodies was demanded in a proclamation issued to-day by the Anti-Fascist Action of Paris, which asserts that they constitute a perpetual threat to peace and liberty. At the same time the proclamation protests against the Government's policy of plenary powers and decrees, which are directed at the further exploiting of workers and the needy. The 500,000 members of the Anti-Fascist Action have been exhorted to stand by in order to counter further encroachments on the rights of labourers. — Trans-Ocean Service.

BOY CUT IN TWO ON RAILWAY TRACK

Half an hour after the mid-day train had left Canton yesterday, when nearing the Nam Kong Station, it ran over a 14-year-old boy who had apparently gone to sleep on the track. The train was stopped and it was found that the body had been cut in two.

QUETTA ROCKED BY NEW 'QUAKE

EARLIER DESTRUCTION COMPLETED

40,000 DEATHROLL REPORTED

Lahore, To-day.

"We thought it was the day of doom," was the general explanation of the first injured refugees to arrive here from Quetta. The refugees said that 90 per cent. of the inhabitants of the low-lying areas were killed and 5 per cent. injured. The remainder escaped.

The first warning of the earthquake was a terrific rumbling. Then the houses began to crumble to their foundations like a pack of cards.

One survivor said that when daybreak arrived they saw the British residents busily engaged in rescue work and they appeared to be truly ministering angels.

An aeroplane belonging to the Viceroy left for the devastated areas carrying army nurses, and many other machines, privately owned and belonging to the Royal Air Force, carried doctors and medical stores to Quetta. — Reuter.

NORMANDIE UNLIKELY TO BREAK RECORD

Icebergs Cause Change Of Course

UNLUCKY MAIDEN VOYAGE

"CHINA MAIL" SPECIAL Paris, To-day.

The new mammoth liner Normandie, now making an attempt on her maiden voyage to gain the "Blue Riband" of the Atlantic, has been compelled by the appearance of icebergs to alter her course towards the south to the winter Atlantic route, according to a radio-gram received from the ship.

Since this is about 100 miles longer than the summer route it is feared that the ship, which, with an average speed of 29.24 knots hitherto maintained, would have beaten the German Lloyd liner Bremen's record, will not succeed in achieving the coveted distinction of making the fastest Atlantic crossing this trip.

It is understood that the captain of the ship has, owing to the favourable weather, asked permission to return by the northern route. — Trans-Ocean Service.

WEATHER REPORT

Cloudy, with occasional showers, improving later, cooler, with light and moderate North-east winds, was the forecast as issued by the Royal Observatory this morning.

His Honour the Chief Justice, Mr. A. D. A. MacGregor, K.C., has been honoured with a Knighthood by His Majesty the King.

A message from Simla says that the deathroll in the whole area affected by the quake is unofficially estimated at 40,000, of which 26,000 occurred in Quetta city. The normal population of the city was seasonably swelled by 5,000 visitors. — Reuter. (Continued on Page 9)

"ROUND GERMANY" FLIGHT

139 Planes Complete
Six-Day Race

THOUSANDS PRESENT FOR
AERIAL THRILLS

Berlin, To-day.

The annual "Round Germany" flight came to a close yesterday afternoon, when 139 planes, in formation, descended at the Tempelhof aerodrome and thus finished the six-day race.

Although the final reckoning of points has not been completed it is certain that the Danzig team, flying Klemm speed-planes, have won the much coveted trophy, the gift of General Hermann Goering; while the Stuttgart team were second, and the Hannover team, which won the last two years' events, was only third.

Many thousands of people lined the Tempelhof field, greeting with deafening cheers the teams when they slowly landed after an arduous zig-zagging flight round the Reich. Before and after the arrival of the competitors the on-lookers were entertained by a varied flying programme, including parachute jumping and glider flying as well as air acrobatics by German aces. — Trans-Ocean Service.

Flemington, N.J., awakened to Hauptmann trial briskness for a brief moment, as Benjamin Heier (right, with attorney) was brought to court to answer a charge of perjury, but Lloyd Fisher, who also is the Hauptmann counsel, won continuance until June. Heier told the Hauptmann jury that he saw Isadore Fisch in the cemetery on the night the Lindbergh ransom was paid.

FRANCE AGAIN WORRIED

COMMONS AIR DEBATE SEEN AS "SHOCK FOR PEACE"

ANGLO-GERMAN NEGOTIATIONS

ANOTHER "SCRAP OF PAPER"

"CHINA MAIL" SPECIAL Paris, Yesterday.

The headline in the Journal des Debats, "Shock for Peace," is taken by most of the other papers as the keynote of their comments on the air pact debate in the House of Commons.

From the speeches of Sir John Simon and other members of the House, including Sir Austen Chamberlain, it is deduced that England is ready to commence separate negotiations with Germany, even if she is not already conducting them.

Le Temps does not dispute that discussions on an air pact should be held, but states that that does not mean by a long way that a pact should now be concluded independently of the other treaties which are necessary in order that the general security system can materialise. (Continued on Page 12)

Canton, Yesterday.

Japanese activities in North China and their attempts to occupy Peiping and Tientsin are being watched with grave concern here, especially the Japanese demand to abolish the Kuomintang, although a revival of the anti-Japanese boycott in Canton is believed unlikely.

Kuomintang circles here point out that Mr. Wang Ching-wei, President of the Executive Yuan, forestalled Japanese opposition to the Kuomintang, claiming Japanese complaints by saying that Dr. Sun Yat-sen in his last speech at Kobe in 1924 advocated Sino-Japanese friendship. (Continued on Page 12)

Evening Modes In Paris

What "Best Dressers" Are Now Wearing

EVENING COIFFURES

London. Although the season cannot be said to be in full swing, it is interesting to note the reaction of some of the acknowledged best dressers in Paris to the variety of styles offered to them in the various collections.

The romantic dress, with its sweeping skirt and low-cut bodice, has not proved so popular as might have been expected, except with the debutante and the very young matron. Unquestionably the picture gown does add a few years to its wearer, and while the 18-year-old girl asks nothing better than to look sophisticated and slightly more mature the woman of 30 prefers to preserve her youthful appearance.

Successful Line

The stream-lined gown is therefore more prevalent at any smart and formal event than any other. Schiaparelli's sari gown has found a few adepts, many of them Englishwomen. When worn by the right type they are smart and becoming and so unusual. Her spiral line is very easy on most figures, and has been successful.

Marcel Rochas' peacock-trained evening dresses have also made their appearance in black and in printed taffetas, and seem to be specially favoured by the very modern and very slim young matron.

Tulle and lace are going to be very smart this spring for evening wear. You see them everywhere, either in whole dresses, or tulle and lace combinations, or the version mentioned above—a tulle cape over a crepe dress.

Lacquered taffetas in the "new" old-fashioned shades have already made their appearance, but it is a little too early for prints. They promise to be very smart, too, and vary from the ultra-large floral spray splashed on a dark ground to tiny old-world motifs.

Back to Flowers

Black, white and navy lead the colour mode. Then come brown, beige, green and red, in silks as well as lace. Floral posies—artificial, and sometimes ultra-large—have been adopted in a whole-hearted manner.

Capes—all lengths—accompany the new evening frocks, and all mediums have been seen so far. Little ermine boleros, or three-quarter ermine coats generously flared, are seen on the slinky evening gown, and as the season progresses we shall see smart women wearing wraps in chiffon, taffetas, or velvet made expressly for each gown and harmonising with the general line. So far fur capes prevail, with a few long black velvet capes or rich red and brown velvet cloaks, covering the entire gown.

Evening coiffures are sleeker than last spring, with curls and rolls banished from the nape of the neck. These are replaced by flat curls that outline the back of the head and sometimes form a bandeau across the front.

The general impression is one of doubt, to the professional skill of smooth heads of hair, tinted red, red gold, and corn yellow, with just enough elegance in the dressing of the hair to avoid anything reminiscent of the boyish bob.

The coat-dress continues in popularity for Spring, and this model chosen by Madge Evans, screen actress, is in navy blue light weight woolen with a distinctive collar of lawn and real lace.

Hair ornaments range from the ingenious bandeau of flowers present in the design of the dress, and passing through the amusing coronets of spiral curls in horsehair dyed to match the wearer's own locks to the diamond hair clip in pairs or single and the very formal diadem.

The New Clothes Demand Poise In Carriage

London. As every artist knows, beauty is more than skin deep. Lovely colouring tells, but there must be poise and grace as well. The majority of women possess good complexions nowadays, thanks to the modern "intensive" cult of beauty, acquired gradually by means of definite beauty rules in the programme of living.

Dull skins and pasty faces have given place to pastel colourings, often happily nature's own. "Good colouring," which used to be remarked upon as an outstanding beauty quality, is now taken as a matter of fact. Beauty exercises, correct dieting and breathing, a love of air indoors and out in the open, have wrought complexion wonders for the present generation of women. And what nature cannot do art contrives, with an abundant supply of beauty preparations in the way of creams, lotions and the more picturesque accessories of powder, rouge and eye shadow to suit every type of skin, hair and eyes.

Picture Beauty

Modern woman has become "artist conscious" in her beauty complexion methods, owing much, no

Flower Vases & Powder Bowls

Chalky Marks Removed

Flower vases and cut-glass powder bowls are inclined to develop chalky marks which will not wash off. When wet they appear to have been removed, but always show again when dry. The only way to remove them completely is to leave them to soak for some hours in malt vinegar. Fill the vases so that the chalky marks are covered, and leave for two or three hours. Then wash as usual. The marks will have disappeared after this treatment.

RUST SPOTS

Removed With Lemon Juice And Table Salt

Rust spots on linen are easily removed by moistening the spot with lemon juice and covering with table salt, leaving it to dry in the sun. Inferior bluing some times causes tiny brown spots that look like rust and these are removed by the lemon juice and salt treatment, although sometimes several trials are necessary.

TAFFETA STILL POPULAR

New Hats And Toques

Taffeta seems to be one of the chief topics of conversation for the new season hats, also the long-shaped toques.

They are attractive shapes with their long headlines cleverly swathed in varied flat upstanding movements, which add zest to a graceful interlacing of contrasting coloured ostrich tips ending in a short twindrop at the back.

Black and red ostrich for black taffeta is one example.

A FEW QUICK-CHANGE FASHION IDEAS

Detachable Frilled Train Converted Into A Cape

TWO-WAY MODES

Two-way modes fall fast and thick upon the dress world, and the more the merrier. A dress, like modern jewellery, may be taken to pieces and be made up into something quite different. Here are a few quick-change fashion ideas.

A chiffon frock with a detachable frilled train (skirt-hem length and not sweeping the ground this time) may be united at the waist and worn as a cape. The train fits snugly about the waist and equally snugly about the shoulders. Another evening gown first appears with a plain, straight cut bodice, narrow shoulder straps and a swathe sash slotted through a couple of diamante rings in the centre front of the frock. Its style can quickly be changed, giving a cape-like effect to the back by carrying the swathed sash over the shoulders, after the ends have been slotted through the rings.

A third two-way frock has detachable balloon sleeves, joined together at the back. The frock looks entirely different if the sleeves are added and a sash to match encircles the waist. Capes and coats are worn with most of the spring evening models and the coatees, in particular, seem to be a part of the frock so cleverly are they cut. A black cinema dress, with a white organdie frill outlining the upper part of the bodice front proved to be a backless dance frock when the coatee was removed.

The coatee vogue is a practical and charming way of utilizing one outfit for semi-evening and full-evening wear. White lace stitched on to taffeta is an effective trimming to the up-to-the-minute dinner dress. Instead of a square cut neckline try two tailored revers on a bodice buttoning down the front. This is the coatee idea again, but, in this guise, it is actually a part of the dress itself.

"ROBERTA" KING'S THEATRE

A new musical picture, RKO-Radio's "Roberta," in which Irene Dunne, Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire and Randolph Scott are in the leading roles, is showing at the King's Theatre to-night.

The story deals with romance in a Paris gown shop, which is inherited by an All-American football player, Randolph Scott. He promptly falls in love with the beautiful head designer, who turns out to be an exiled Russian princess. She, of course, is Miss Dunne, who in the course of the film sings many song hits.

Astaire, as the dance band leader of the football hero, and Miss Rogers, as the toast of Paris night club patrons, do their part to make the gown shop the sensation of all gay Paris.

The outstanding feature of the picture is a fashion show, in which a selected group of America's most beautiful girls display the most chic of feminine finery.

Supporting the four stars are Helen Westly, Victor Varconi, Claire Dodd and Louis Alberici.

"NAUGHTY MARIETTA" QUEEN'S THEATRE

Jeanette MacDonald, the glamorous heroine of "Merry Widow," will be seen this time not with the laughing and singing actor, Maurice Chevalier, but with Nelson Eddy, an eminent American baritone, in M-G-M's "Naughty Marietta," which is being screened at the Queen's Theatre to-day.

The picture tells a graphic story of the settlement of New Orleans by the French in the days of Louis XV; and the love of a disguised French princess, seeking escape from a marriage of State. Among the dramatic highlights are the flight from Paris, the battle with pirates, the capture of the casquette girls, the New Orleans marriage market, the sensational confession of the princess, and the disillusionment of her officer lover.

Miss MacDonald's melodious voice will be heard once again in such song hits as "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life," "I'm falling in Love With Someone," "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp," the Italian street song, and many other new lyrics. The cast includes Akim Tamiroff, of "The Merry Widow," Harold Huber, of "The Bowery," Mary Doran, of "Broadway Melody," and Cecilia Parker, who played Greta Garbo's sister in "The Painted Veil."

"MONTE CARLO NIGHTS" ALHAMBRA THEATRE

"Monte Carlo Nights," the second Monogram production, which is showing at the Alhambra Theatre to-day, with Mary Brian and John Darrow in the leading roles, is a screen version of "Numbers of Death" from the pen of that master of mystery thrillers, E. Phillips Oppenheim.

The story concerns itself with Larry Sturgis, the young son of a wealthy family in New York, who is sent to prison for murder on the eve of his marriage to a beautiful girl. Having eluded the guards, Larry starts on the hunt for the real murderer, whom he knows by an unusual clue of four numbers, which the murderer plays at roulette.

This new Monogram production holds spectators spellbound on the edges of their seats, from the fast-moving introduction to the sensational climax, and proves definitely that a well-produced Oppenheim story is the last word in this type of entertainment.

"THE AFFAIRS OF CELLINI" ORIENTAL THEATRE

"The Affairs of Cellini," a romantic comedy, depicting the amorous escapades of the great Italian sculptor and goldsmith of the 16th century, who in his famous autobiography modestly admitted that he was the world's greatest lover, is being shown at the Oriental Theatre.

Constance Bennett in the lead role, achieves a distinction that has fallen to no other outstanding star in the dramatic film field. Among the features of this picture is an original ballet staged by Adolph Bolm, in which three internationally famed dancers head the list.

Freddie March plays Cellini.

KISS THAT HEALS SNAKE BITES

Mysterious Power Of Russian Woman

STUDY OF CASE BEING TAKEN UP

Moscow.

"She cures snake bites by kissing them"—such was the rumour going about a small town in Armenia near Erivan.

Doctors at first discounted the rumour as being superstition, but they began to hear of more and more victims of poisonous snakes who had been cured by this "miraculous" method.

Investigation showed the rumour to be true. By applying some of her saliva to the bite of a venomous snake the woman cured the victim.

She had been bitten by deadly rattlesnakes and other poisonous reptiles so much that she had developed immunity in herself and was able to pass it on.

The question of finding a method of making everyone immune through study of her case is now being taken up.

PRIEST WHO KNEW 54 LANGUAGES

Only Once Visited A Foreign Country

An Englishman who knew 54 languages, but had been out of his country only once in the 77 years of his lifetime, died in London recently. He was Father William Kent, a Roman Catholic priest, who for nearly 54 years had been attached to the Church of St. Mary of the Angels, Westmoreland-road, Bayswater, W.

Father Kent was a Londoner by birth, and spent all his life in London. The only foreign country he ever visited was Belgium, and yet there must be few men to-day who could equal his record of 54 languages. Many of them he spoke fluently.

Father Kent devoted his life to his church, and taught theology to the students at the college which used to be attached to it and was absorbed by St. Edmund's College, Ware, Hertfordshire.

An early passion for comparative philology—the science of the human language in all its branches—led Father Kent to study Biblical and Talmudic origins, and from them he built up his enormous repository of dead and living tongues.

Though handicapped for many years by deafness, Father Kent was always willing to help the hundreds of people, from famous scientists and antiquarians to police court officials, who sought his aid in unravelling language problems. Nevertheless, he was not unduly proud of his knowledge. "There are thousands of languages, and I know only 54 of them," he remarked when he was 73.

Father Kent was fond of maintaining that Cockney—English was often better than more educated type.

"In every language in the world except English, the vowel sound 'ai' is pronounced 'i' he said. "So it should be, and when the Cockney talks about the 'mile trine' he is perfectly right."

while Constance Bennett is seen as the Duchess of Florence, who casts an amorous eye toward the irresistible rogue.

The two stars are supported by Fay Wray, Frank Morgan, Louis Calhern, Vince Barnett, Jessie Ralph, Paul Harvey, John Rutherford and Irene Ware.

"BRIGHT EYES" STAR THEATRE

Fox Film's "Bright Eyes," a picture with a Southern California Christmas setting, starring Shirley Temple, is being shown at the Star Theatre to-day.

James Dunn against supports Shirley as her pal and is the leading character in the film. Among the outstanding features of the picture is a rollicking musical number, "On The Good Ship Lollipop," which is sung by Shirley.

Those supporting the cast, besides Shirley and James, are Jane Darwell, who scored a success in "The White Parade," Louis Wilson, Judith Allen, Theodore von Eltz, Dorothy Christy, Charles Sellon, Jane Withers, Brando Hurst, Fredric March, Walter Johnson and George Irving.

BRIDGE NOTES

PLAYING FOR AVERAGE

By Ely Culbertson

Although it may sound absurd on the face of it, quite frequently a player's course of action can be influenced by the ability and the type of game played by another player at another table. This situation occurs in team-of-four matches. Often the Declarer is confronted with two different lines of play and really has no way to deciding which one to adopt.

An experienced tournament player will realize, if the hand is not particularly unusual, that this same hand will be played at the identical contract by a player of the opposing team when the board is played the second time. If the player is not able to get any other indication as to which of two possible plays to choose, he will, if he knows the game of his opponent who will sit in the identical seat at the other table, try to imagine which play this other party will adopt and then adopt the same one. This is based on the theory that matches are won not by playing to create unnatural swings but by playing for an average result or to achieve par on each hand.

If you do this throughout a match and never make any mistakes, you are almost certain to come out ahead at the finish—with your margin of victory depending upon the amount of errors the opponents make.

On to-day's hand, which took place in the quarter-final round of the knockout team-of-four event at Asbury Park, the South player reached a Grand Slam contract and was faced with the age-old problem of what to do about the missing Queen of trumps. He had absolutely no way of making up his mind, but realized that the member of the other team who would subsequently hold the same hand was one who practically never finessed with nine trumps missing. Accordingly he played for the drop—and, as it happened, succeeded in capturing the missing Queen.

The bidding:
North East South West
1 D Pass 2 S Pass
3 S Pass 4 H Pass
4 S Pass 4 N T Pass
5 N T Pass 7 S Pass
Pass Pass

The bidding followed more or less conventional lines. The final seven-spade bid was only a slight gamble, as the Four-Five No-trump Convention had located the necessary key cards and the only possible holding which North could have which would not give South some sort of play for the hand was one which included the Ace and two small hearts.

West made the harmless opening of his fourth best club, and the Ace in Dummy won the trick. The spade Jack was now led. East played small, and the Declarer went up with the King. He returned to Dummy with a heart and now led another spade.

At this point, with no adverse bidding and nothing particularly unusual about the North and South distribution to either confirm or deny the probability of one of the opponents holding a singleton spade, South might have tossed a coin mentally to decide what to do. But his decision, as mentioned above, was influenced by a personality at a table at the other end of the room.

Fortunately for South, the South player at the other table was one with whom he had previously played in a great many games. Remembering from these games that the other South player, practically never took a finesse if it was ever slightly against the percent resulted.

FAMOUS ACTRESS A BANKRUPT

Gertrude Lawrence Spent $10,000 A Year

STORY OF PAWNED JEWELLERY

Gertrude Lawrence, the stage and screen star, appeared in the London Bankruptcy Court recently before Mr. Registrar Warrington.

Her name was given as Gertrude Alice Dagmar Howley, and she was described as of Cumberland-place, Regent's Park.

Her statement of affairs shows liabilities $25,066, of which $24,728 are expected to rank, and assets $1873, of which $900 represent jewellery.

Formed a Company

Examined by the Official Receiver, Miss Lawrence said that she had always been engaged as an actress, appearing in this country and America.

In September, 1932, she was in financial difficulties and formed Gertrude Lawrence, Ltd., with which company she entered into an agreement to pay a portion of her earnings to enable it to discharge her debts, both past and future.

She pay moneys to the company until last December and certain of her debts were liquidated.

In February, 1933, she helped to form a company to carry on business as florists, and acted as a director until the date of the receiving order.

Miss Lawrence attributed her failure to having lived beyond her means, heavy domestic expenses, ill-health, and a demand for income-tax on her earnings in America.

$6,900 In Gifts

Her deficiency account showed that in February 1932 she had a surplus in assets of $16,657 and had since earned $19,088, of which, however, $8,845 went in professional expenses, publicity and gifts to professional people.

She had received gifts totalling $6,900, and $1,238 as her share of Noel Coward's play "Private Lives"; also $642 from royalties on gramophone records and $582 from the sale of clothing.

The chief items on the other side of the account were:

Loss on sale of jewellery $13,000;
Household and personal expenses $28,744;

Income-tax and surtax $14,662.

Miss Lawrence agreed that the commencing surplus of $16,657 was only arrived at by including $16,250 as the value of her jewellery and by ignoring any liability for income-tax on her American earnings.

The Official Receiver—At that time the liability existed?

"I was not aware of it," Miss Lawrence replied.

Pawned Jewellery

In May 1932 she pawned the jewellery for $2,000, and afterward raised a further $1,000 on the pawn tickets. In February 1934 the pawnbrokers sold the whole of the jewellery, on which she had placed the value of $16,250, and returned her about $5. But she refused to accept it. She was, however, advised by counsel not to go further in the matter.

That was partly, because any action would have been very expensive and partly because it was considered unwise to have the publicity.

Miss Lawrence agreed that, although she was in financial difficulties in 1932 she had since expended $26,744 on her own personal expenses. But that, she explained, was partly to make a home here because she had no intention of returning to America and, if she did have to return, she thought that it would be a good investment for letting purposes.

"But it turned out the other

AMERICA'S EXCEPTIONALLY STRONG BID FOR THE DAVIS CUP

JUBILEE OF BRITISH ATHLETIC WORLD ALMOST ON A PAR WITH UNITED STATES

BERLIN OLYMPIC PREPARATIONS

London, May 3.

KING George's Jubilee Year is a year of innovations in English track and field sport. The first British indoor athletic championships have already been held at the Empire Pool and Sports Arena, Wembley—they were accounted quite a successful experiment—and later Scotland will, for the first time, be the scene of an international meet in which the full strength of Britain is concerned.

The opposition at Glasgow, on June 29 will be provided by the Finnish team. The events on the programme are to be 100, 220, 440 and 880 yards, one-mile, three-mile, two-mile steeplechase, high jump, long jump, discus-throw, javelin-throw, and two relay races.

Britain's other international engagements this season are against France at the White City Stadium, London, on July 27, and against Germany at Cologne or Munich, on Aug. 11. The approach of the 1936 Olympic Games in Berlin will infuse special interest into the performances at these contests.

The change-over from cross-country running to track coincides each year with the team relay road race from London to Brighton. This was decided on April 13 and the winners were Belgrave Harriers, holders of the National cross-country championship. They covered the distance of 54 miles 1232 yards in 4h. 49m. 59s. and their margin of victory was only 37 seconds. Birchfield Harriers (Birmingham) arrived second, Polytechnic Harriers third, Surrey Athletic Club, fourth; South London Harriers, fifth; and Herne Hill Harriers, sixth.

Looking Back

On the same date the Public Schools championships were held at the White City. Looking back over the list of past winners at this meeting one sees the names of many boys who developed into world-famous stars; and, looking at some of the successful runners on April 13, one could visualize their triumphant arrival in the top.

THOMAS HAMPSON'S CHOICE

Migh Have Become A Furlong Specialist

London, April 12. Thomas Hampson, the 800-metres record-holder and Olympic Games winner, might have become a furlong specialist but for the retirement of Douglas Lowe, the brilliant half-mile, in 1928.

Hampson tells us in "Hints on Running," a useful little book just published, that he always preferred the 220 yards race. Then Lowe gave up and he thought things over.

"I chose to attempt the half-mile," he said, "because there seemed to be a better opportunity for success there."

There certainly was.

Five Japanese Swimmers Invited To Australia

Tokyo, May 27.

Five of Japan's swimming stars were to-day in possession of invitations to aquatic meets to be held in Melbourne and Sydney next January, but may remain home because the Japan Amateur Aquatic Union does not want its stars to go abroad before the 1936 Olympic Games. The invitation was extended by the Sydney Swimming Association, through Mr. Yasutaro Sakagami, an official of the Japanese organization.

Seizo Makino and Miss Hideko Mayebata headed the list of five title-holders invited to Australia. The others were Masanori Yusa, Koji Miyazaki and Hiroshi Negami. Although the Japan Amateur Aquatic Union has not yet made public its decision an official of the organization intimated that the Union probably will not accept the invitation—Rengo.

The outstanding feature of the opening day bill of fare in the major baseball leagues was the appearance of Babe Ruth in a National League uniform for the first time. The Bambino is missing one at the unfamiliar home plate of the Braves in Boston.

RUMJAHN AND E. d. ARCULLI CLASH ON THURSDAY

The draw for Second Round of the Open Singles Lawn Bowls Championship has resulted in several interesting ties, the best of which will undoubtedly be the meeting of D. Rumjahn and E. d. Arculli.

Runner-up last year to A. W. Grimmit, Rumjahn is still playing a very good game, and should enter the third round, though not before staving off the stern challenge of an opponent with a reputation for steadiness.

GORDON RICHARDS AS ROUGH-RIDER

MARE'S TRICKS ON COURSE

CHAMPION JOCKEYS BRILLIANT FEAT

London, Apr. 29. Gordon Richards, before his great race-riding feat at Epsom yesterday, when he rode Montrose to victory in the City and Suburban Handicap and three other winners, showed himself to be a master in rough-riding.

No rodeo in the Wild West has seen more masterly horsemanship than that of Richards on Lone Isle, his mount in the first race, before he got her to the starting-gate.

Mare's Frantic Efforts

With head down, back humped, and heels in the air, she made frantic efforts to dislodge Richards, turning and twisting like an eel. But Richards won without even showing her his whip.

After five or six minutes of these contortions, the mare seemed to admit that she was beaten, and with one last violent buck, and with tail whirling viciously, she galloped up the course to the starting-post and allowed Richards to walk her up to the starting-gate with the other runners.

M.C.C. MEMBERSHIP INCREASE

M.C.C. are increasing their membership this season by 1,000 instead of 200 as usual, and in 1936 and subsequent years the annual increase will be 300. Lord Cromer, Mr. H. D. G. Leveson-Gower, Lieut. Colonel C. Heseltine, and Mr. G. O. Allen have been nominated to vacancies on the committee.

WEEK'S LAWN TENNIS LEAGUE ENCOUNTERS

NO MIXED DOUBLES TO-MORROW

There will be a break in the Tennis League to-day on the occasion of His Majesty the King's Birthday, but the "A" Division will be resumed to-morrow, weather permitting.

The champions, the Chinese Recreation Club, should enhance their chances with an easy win over the Recreio "B" team whom they meet at Causeway Bay, while the Kowloon Cricket Club, who are at present leading in the table by virtue of the number of games they have won are likely to be fully extended by the Recreio "A" at home.

A close encounter should ensue from the clash between the Hong Kong Cricket Club and the Craiginger Club, both of whom have yet to register a win.

Perry And Austin Again Going For French Title

London, May 7.

F. J. Perry and H. W. Austin, our leading tennis players, are again to strive for a title which (says Bruce Harris) no Englishman has ever won—that of lawn tennis champion of France.

The Paris tournament begins to-day after next, and Perry and Austin will be included in the British team.

Perry has had a run of all success in Paris. He lost there to G.

FORMER CAPTAIN IS AGAIN SELECTED DOUBLES TEAMS BEST IN UNITED STATES

ALLISON'S IMPROVED FORM

(By G. M. R. HOLMES, C.S.M.)

New York, May 3.

WHILE there will, no doubt, be criticism regarding the naming of Joseph W. Wear, captain, and Harry L. Hillman, manager and trainer of the United States lawn tennis team which is to go overseas this summer in quest of the Davis Cup, we believe that the selection of both of these men is one which could not be improved upon.

In naming Wear to the post of captain, the selection committee picked a man who has not only had experience in playing lawn tennis and racquets, but he captained the Davis Cup team of 1928 and did a very good piece of work. That he will prove to be a worthy successor to R. Norris Williams 2nd, who captained the 1934 team, is our firm conviction.

And when it comes to the selection of Hillman as manager and trainer of the team, there is every reason to feel that those departments will be taken care of in the best manner possible. To one who has watched the work of Hillman as an Olympic champion, a trainer of track and field athletes and football players at Dartmouth College, as well as a trainer of athletes for Olympic Games, his appointment by the U.S.L.T.A. causes great satisfaction.

Always extremely popular with the boys who come under his watchful eye, he has been most successful and there is no question but what Uncle Sam's tennis stars will be in the pink of condition when they take the courts against their Davis Cup rivals in Europe.

Three Veterans To Make Trip

Unless the unexpected happens, three veterans will be in the squad when it sails for England. They will be Wilmer L. Allison Jr., Sidney B. Wood Jr. and John W. Van Ryn, and they will undoubtedly form the backbone of the team.

To this trio at least two, and possibly three, youngsters will be added in the persons of J. Donald Rudge, C. G. Mako and Bryan M. Grant Jr. The first two are sure to make the trip, and should Grant show up strongly in the American zone matches he may be taken along.

Should Make Strong Team

Australian Challenger To Visit Europe

Sydney, Apr. 25.

The Australian middle-weight champion, Fred Henneberry, announces his acceptance of an offer to visit Europe for a fight with Marcel Thil, for the latter's world championship.

The offer, it is stated, also contains a guarantee of $750 with the privilege of 25 per cent. of the takings to fight the British champion, Jock MacAvoy, in London.

The champion expects to leave for England at the end of May.

Wilmer Allison Jr. and John van Ryn, America's Doubles hope for their European Zone Davis Cup tennis clashes.

CLASSIC MIXED FOURSOMES GOLF MATCH FOR JUNE

MRS. VARE AND MISS WETHERED TO MEET

THREE OF WORLD'S BEST GOLFERS

Boston, May 29.

When Bobby Jones and Joyce Wethered tee off against Mrs. Glenna Collett Vare and a partner yet to be named in a four-ball, best-ball match, one of the most interesting of golf contests will take place, as the three players who are already named are among the best men and women players the links game has ever known.

Many are the national championships which this trio has held during the past, and but for the fact that two of them retired some few years ago, they would probably be holding a title or two at the present time. Bobby Jones won no fewer than 12 major titles before he retired from the amateur ranks. They were five United States amateur, four United States open, three British open and one British amateur, four of them being won in one year for the only grand slam ever made in golf.

HAGEN TRAINING FOR U.S. OPEN TITLE WITH HIGH HOPES

BELIEVES OLDER PLAYER WILL WIN

THE YOUNGER PLAYERS HAVE THE EDGE

Detroit, April 30.

Walter Hagen, admitting that youth must be served eventually, isn't willing to do any of the serving just yet, he said optimistically to-day as he began a training for the national open golf championships this June at Oakmont, Penna.

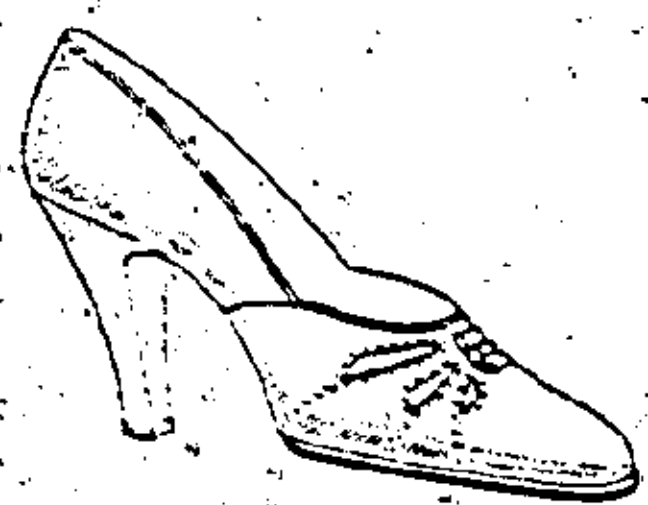

"The Haig," holder of about 50 championships in 23 years of links competition, sees a chance for one of the "old guard" to win the open crown because of the "trickiness" of Oakmont's traps and general layout.

Remains To Be Seen

It remains to be seen whether the younger stars in the game to-day have built their games around a certain course or have developed games good enough for any course, and particularly one as tricky as Oakmont," Hagen said. "I agree with Tommy Armour that Oakmont gives the older and more experienced golfer a chance to win."

GOOD BOWLS GAMES FOR THIS WEEK

A Good Clash

Holland, who defeated Grimmit, the holder, in one of the best matches of the season, meets F. X. M. da Silva, one of the best players in the Recreio team, and the encounter should produce some good bowls.

The first batch of matches take place to-morrow, there being no scheduled games to-day.

F. J. Perry is to be invited by the president of the Belgian Lawn Tennis Federation to take part in a tournament during the Brussels International Exhibition (states a Reuter message from Brussels).

The matches will be begun on June 4 and will last for a week.

Efforts are also being made to induce Senorita Lizana, the Chilean player, to compete. It is stated that Franlein Aussem and several of Germany's leading men players have accepted invitations.

Hagen believes that Henry Picard and Ky Laffoon are the two most improved players "in the younger crop of stars" now in the professional field. Picard, he said, has a fine variety of shots and is a "sound hitter" and has a good chance of winning the open title.

Wants Hot Weather

Hagen is hoping hot weather will visit Detroit soon. Admitting the long winter "gold-trail" tour left him somewhat tired, he said he believed warm weather and daily rounds would put him back in shape.

He intends to play a number of courses here, get plenty of fresh air and rest and concentrate on his game in the hope of qualifying for the open event. It will be the first time "in years," he said, that he has had to qualify instead of being automatically eligible.

Another Win And Then?

"When you get older you lose consistency," Hagen said. "The younger stars have the edge because of condition. The older you get the more you lose a certain touch necessary to win consistently. But I believe I have a fair chance to qualify for and win the open this summer."

Hagen, all previous reports to the contrary, isn't planning to retire from competitive golf for a while yet. "I want to win another championship before I pass out of the picture," he says.

The New York Giants will fight hard this season to regain the prestige they lost last year when they slumped during the last weeks to let St. Louis Cards nose them out for the pennant. Carl Hubbell, Jo-Jo Moore (top, r. and l.); Mel Ott and Bill Terry (below, l. and r.), will lead the attack.

LEN HARVEY WINS VERY POOR FIGHT FROM FRENCHMAN

MARCEL LAURIOT OUTPOINTED

WHEN CLEVERNESS BECOMES TEDIOUS

London, April 30.

Len Harvey gave a very disappointing display last night in out-pointing Marcel Lauriot, the French light-heavyweight champion, over 10 rounds at the Jubilee night of the Ring, Blackfriars, where he fought so many glorious battles earlier in his career.

It was stated afterwards that Harvey had injured his left hand early in the second round, and in these circumstances he cannot be blamed.

A Novice

The pity of it was that he started the fight with the sort of aggressive boxing which I have always felt he could produce if he had the mind to do so. The Frenchman looked a novice on his hands. In fact, the fight had lasted no more than two minutes when a smashing left hook to the jaw dropped him for nine seconds.

Many severe body punches preceded and followed that left hook, and it seemed that Lauriot had lasted the round only to fall in the next. But afterwards, until the very last round, Harvey was content to defend. In this also he was supreme, but his cleverness became tedious.

Frenchman Shaken

Towards the end, stung by a punch from the Frenchman which he evidently thought was low, Harvey began to fight again. Several well-timed short clipping punches shook Lauriot's jaw, but had no effect, and the fight petered out.

Lauriot, though he was outclassed, carried the fight to Harvey throughout. He was a good deal the lighter man and was helpless in the powerful grip of his opponent. But except for that one surprise punch in the first round he was never troubled.

Phil Scott, Matt Wells, Johnny Curley and many other "old-timers" who were favourites at the Ring twelve and fifteen years ago, appeared, and boxed. Some of them had grown stout and some bald, but they were all remembered.

Mrs. Vane won the United States women's title five times, while Miss Wethered captured the British women's title four times, so that the trio has no fewer than 22 major championships to its credit, and by the time Mrs. Vane's partner has been named, the number of titles involved in the match will undoubtedly be much larger.

Miss Wethered vs. Mrs. Vane

Many golf experts have regarded Miss Wethered as the greatest woman golfer of all time. Her play in the British championship tournaments in which she took part was certainly of high rank and in the British amateur of 1930 she staged one of the greatest exhibitions of golf in the final round when she defeated Mrs. Vane after the latter had finished the first nine of the 36 holes of play 5 up.

Two other times did these two women meet on the links and each time Miss Wethered came out the victor. The first time was in the British championship of 1925, when she defeated Mrs. Vane in third round, and the other time was in the Anglo-American match of 1932.

While this will be a four-ball match, it is planned to have the two women keep their cards, and it will be interesting to see if Miss Wethered still has the mastery over Mrs. Vane. In the three previous matches the scores were 4 and 3, 3 and 1, and 5 and 4.

grade of athletics before many more seasons are ended. R. Scott, of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, provides a shining example. He won the half mile in record time (1m. 59.2s.) and then took the quarter.

The challenge trophy awarded to the most successful school was carried out of England by the representatives of Schule Schloss, from Salem, Germany, who owed their success almost entirely to superiority in the field events. Lancing was second, with 28 points to Salem's 37½, and Highgate and Bossall tied for third place with 20 apiece. K. Von Kuehlmann, the German captain, won the discus throw at 131 ft. 5½ in. and the 12-pound weight put at 45 ft. 8¼ in.—the latter return being a record for the meet.

International Varsity Games

The Universities Athletic Union's championship meeting at the White City on May 17 derives special significance this year from the fact that the results will influence the selection of the British varsity team for the International Universities' Games in Hungary from Aug. 10-18. Students from more than 40 countries are expected to take part in this international festival, which will comprise, in addition to athletics, association football, fencing, swimming, gymnastics, lawn tennis and other sports.

A week after the U.A.U. championships the White City will be the scene of the yearly contest for the Kinnaird Trophy, the closest approach in this country to an inter-club track and field championship. The British games, always a very popular Whitsuntide Bank Holiday engagement, can be counted upon to draw the biggest crowd of the season on June 10, and then come the divisional championships on June 22, the Amateur Athletic Association's junior championships on July 6, and the A.A.A. senior meeting on July 12 and 13.

Standards Raised

At the Amateur Athletic Association's senior meet, which this summer will command additional attention in view of the forthcoming Olympic Games, some alterations have been made in the qualifications for "standard" medals. To earn one of these much-prized awards, a quarter-miler must now cover his distance in 51.2s. or less, instead of 51.4s., and a mile must equal or beat 4m. 26s., instead of 4m. 28s.

Other standard reductions are from 14m. 50s. to 14m. 45s. in the two miles walk, and from 55m. to 54m. 30s. in the seven miles walk, while hammer-throwers are now called upon for 130ft. or more, instead of 115ft. The last two big shows of the season are the meet between Oxford-Cambridge and Harvard-Yale, July 20, and the Franco-British match, July 27. The international varsity contest is the twelfth of an exceedingly popular over players who appeared perfectly competent to win the cup back to its native heath, only to fail in the quest.

Remembering all this, perhaps it would be just as well not to express any opinion regarding the prospects for 1935; but we cannot help remarking that, if the United States comes through the American zone contests as it should, and the above combination goes overseas, America will have a strong team. In fact, we believe that, all things considered, it will be one of the strongest that has tried to recapture the cup in recent years.

Allison The Chief Hope

On Allison will rest the chief hope of victory. The famous player from Austin, Texas, put up a great battle in the United States championship singles last year, and has shown some very good tennis this spring.

Grant has one victory over him to his credit; but outside of this match Allison has come through with victories in the North and South and Mason and Dixon tournaments, and appears to be improving as the season goes on.

For doubles purposes America will have a strong combination in Allison and Van Ryn, or in Budge and Mako. In fact, there should be little or no question about America winning the doubles, leaving it to the singles players to take two of their four matches. America is certainly putting her best foot forward this year, and if she fails it will be because her best was not good enough.

PETERSEN AND NEUSEL TO CLASH AGAIN

Jack Petersen, the British heavy-weight boxing champion, and Walter Neusel, of Germany, will meet in their return contest, over 15 rounds, in the open-air at the Empire Stadium, Wembley, on Tuesday, June 25.

series.

Lough Borough School

Improvement is long overdue in the standard attained by Britain's field-event specialists, and for this reason the Amateur Athletic Association is again arranging for a Summer School of Athletic training to be established at Loughborough at the end of the summer. The coaches appointed to take charge of the various sections of the school are G. M. Moll and J. S. Moll for the high jump; R. W. Reavens, long jump; M. C. Nokes, hammer-throw; F. P. Webster, pole vault; R. L. Howland, weight-putt; E. St. G. Harper, hurdling; J. Cotter, javelin; J. E. Lovelock, running, and J. A. Hayes, massage. It will be seen that the enthusiasts who take the A. A. A. course are to receive instruction from tutors of practical and present-day experience in the highest class of competition.

FOREMAN'S NIGHT FEAT

On Top Of St. Paul's In A Gale

A thrilling feat in a 70 mile an hour gale on the top of the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral 350 feet above the ground, was revealed recently.

A gale which drove the Aquitania aground caused Mr. E. J. Bolwell, clerk of the works at the Cathedral, to have fears for the safety of the scaffolding which has been erected for the cleaning of the gold cross which surmounts the dome. He telephoned the foreman on night duty, and asked his opinion.

"I think the scaffold's all right, but I will go and see at once," he replied.

Without any fuss, he immediately ascended to the base of the cross on the outside of the dome.

It was pitch dark, and a fierce wind was blowing. He climbed out on to a 6ft. platform, lashed himself with a rope to a stanchion, and for an hour worked at making the scaffolding more secure. He regarded it as just part of his day's work.

THE B.R.C.'S LATEST BROGUE

Pall Mall Is Now Pell-Mell

BUT NOT MEANT FOR THE MASSES

The latest instalment of "An-nouncer's English," the quaint B.R.C. patois manufactured exclusively in Langhamplace, contains some remarkable new acoustic effects.

Examples:—
 Landscape—"Landscape."
 Quinine—"Quinine."
 Hemlock—"Haynos."
 Londonderry—"Lundonderry" (when referring to place).
 Londonderry—"Lundonderry" (when referring to place).
 Marylebone—"Marribon."
 Pall Mall—"Pell Mell."

The B.R.C. does not, of course, attempt to imitate this dialect among the mass of the populace.

Busman's Style.

The B.R.C. in fact, would probably consider it pretty haynos if the populace attempted to make noises which are designed for use only in conjunction with a Balliol larynx.

But it does regard its own pronunciations as authoritative. The two place-names in this list, however, are not likely to go unchallenged.

In the case of "Marribon," there are at least two rival schools. One is an M.C.C. member who, in his rare waking moments, pronounces it "Marribon," while the standard omnibus-conductor version is "Merribon."

One must really remove the hat to the B.R.C. for its sheer audacity in making a definite decision in the case of Pall Mall—a street whose pronunciation has provoked more controversy than Mae West or Lardwood.

There are some circles in which Pall Mall is so incontestably Pell Mall that any suburban boulevard caught Pell-Melling it is immediately ostracized, if not tarred and feathered.

There are other circles in which Pall Mall is so indubitably Pell Mell that any yokel caught Pell-Malling it is ruthlessly expunged, expelled, struck off, blackballed, or otherwise discouraged.

Back to Stuart Times.

Well, now that the B.R.C. has made up its mind, it might not be a bad moment to remind them that the original form of Pall Mall was Paille-Maille, the French game introduced into England by the Stuarts.

It was a game something like croquet, and in Stuart times was played in St. James's Fields, which Pall Mall now traverses.

In 1598 Sir Robert Dallington wrote of the game:—
 "Among all the exercises of France I prefer none before the Paille-Maille, both because it is a gentleman-like sport, not violent, and yields good occasion and opportunity of discourse."

An opportunity which the acumen....

B.R.C. has seized with its customary

CO-EDUCATION BAN EXPLAINED

Peiping Mayor Gives His Reason

Col. Yuan Liang, Mayor of Peiping, interviewed by Chinese pressmen in Shanghai recently, gave his reason why he had advocated the imposition of a ban on co-education in Peiping middle schools. The ban, Col. Yuan said, would enable the students to devote their time to studies. Even in European countries, co-education was not allowed in middle schools. Col. Yuan said he did not wish to ban co-education in colleges or universities.

Modern Structures To Be Erected

The structure which at present houses the offices, customs and restaurant is to be pulled down and replaced by a large modern building at the estimated cost of about 42,000,000 francs.

Marks On Chinese Porcelain

Some Hints For Ardent Collectors

(By C. G. REEDE)

MORE than the similar products of any other country, the old pottery and porcelains of China are sought and admired for the supreme excellence of their materials, modelling, and beauty of glazes and decorations.

It is not easy, acquainted as we are with the political China of to-day, to think of the nation as the leader in civilization and culture 1000 years ago. Yet, this it was, and two centuries later Venetians who had ventured so far to the east found much to astonish them in the advanced social and commercial life of China, so highly developed in government and the arts.

THE KOH-I-NOR

History of Famous Diamond

ONCE KEPT IN STUD AND BUTTON BOX

From its customary resting place among the regalia in the Tower of London the Koh-i-Nor was temporarily taken to adorn Her Majesty's attire at the Jubilee Banquet at Buckingham Palace. This was in accordance with precedent.

The diamond two hundred years ago was in the possession of Nadir Shah, the great Persian conqueror. In 1813 it passed into the keeping of Maharaja Ranjit Singh, the Sikh ruler of the Punjab. After the second and final Sikh War of 1848 the Koh-i-Nor came into the possession of the East India Company, by whom it was presented to Queen Victoria in 1850. And the circumstances leading to that presentation were in their way as romantic as any of the other vicissitudes of the famous stone.

Delivered To Lawrence

After the fighting which led to the occupation of Lahore by the East India Company's troops, John Lawrence and his brother Henry were busily engaged in establishing the new administration. The diamond was brought to John as he was writing his despatches.

Although he made mention of it in those reports to his superiors, he put it into his dressing-gown pocket and promptly forgot all about it. Some weeks later, he was reminded by a definite request for the prompt transmission of the stone in order that the Company might present it to Her Majesty.

Something like consternation prevailed. Lawrence could not remember what had happened. The dressing gown was unearthed but its pocket was empty.

"Glass" Found

Recourse was had to the faithful bearer, who was asked whether he had seen the jewel. The reply was that a "piece of glass" had been found in the gown and put away safely. Thereupon it was produced from the familiar tin box in which all bearers, to this very day, keep trouser buttons, buckles, laces and other odds and ends ancillary to the repair of their masters' clothes. Lawrence breathed again.

The stone which, in that negligent custody, had been out of his ken for several weeks, was duly packed up for its new and glorious destiny as a veritable gem of the British Crown.

WIVES EXCHANGED IN ENGLISH VILLAGE

Unemployment Wrecks Family Life

MARRIAGE IS MUCH TOO EXPENSIVE

Some of the men in the village of Jump, near Barnsley, exchange wives.

"The Black Spot of Yorkshire" social workers, police, and clergy call the village, which has a population of more than 5,000.

It has been "dead" for 12 years—ever since the closing of the mine in which 90 per cent. of the male population used to work. Standards of life and morality have been broken down.

Scores of couples live together without benefit of clergy or registrar. They call it "living tally."

Ghastly Facts Told

Life for nearly all is a business of raw, ugly essentials. Many, of course, are holding out behind the ramparts of a true family life.

Social workers have revealed the following amazing facts:—
 "The exchanging of wives happens frequently," said one.

"There is little we can do. The women are willing parties. No offence against the law has been committed.... All that is left is to try to show them that it is wrong."

"And it is not easy to talk ethics to a woman who hasn't had a real home, a new dress, or even a really square meal for years."

Economic Surety
 "My work is constantly bringing me into contact with men and women who 'live tally'.... Their attitude has opened my eyes."

"I asked one woman why she did not marry and settle down properly. She told me she was more sure of 'her man' on their present basis. The threat of the affiliation order apparently is a bigger force for economic stability than the marriage lines."

"And I suppose even the small expense of a village wedding may appear as a financial impossibility. Our problem is that more than 80 per cent. of the village is entirely outside organised religion."

It is a sad story. Twelve years ago this village was one of the most prosperous in the South Yorkshire coalfield. Ninety out of every 100 men and youths were employed at the nearby colliery.

The colliery closed down. Coal could be drawn more economically from a pit several miles away. That pit already had all the men it needed.

A few of the villagers found jobs elsewhere. But for 12 long years, a fluctuating 75 per cent. of the male population has been unemployed.

Hopeless Future

And there is no hope for the future. All they have to look ahead to is the "parish."

Some of the young people have managed to escape to other towns—the girls as domestic servants, the youths as labourers. But such opportunities are so few.

The local council has done what it could. A few new houses have been built. Relief measures have been tried.

The church and social workers have helped by securing old clothing from wealthier communities.

But these are not enough to destroy the black hopelessness that is the root cause of Jump's unenviable reputation.

"If we could find the men jobs," a church worker told me, "it would soon be different."

MEDICINES THAT KILL

Advertisements Must Be Approved

Advertisements for elixirs of eternal youth and various assortments of remedies, stimulants, tonics, specifics, sedatives, panaceas, nostrums, ointments, palliatives, cure-alls, correctives, lozenges, depilatories and just plain quack medicines, must henceforth receive the official approval of the Mayor's office before they be printed in the Tientsin Chinese press, it was announced recently.

Patent medicine advertisements have been filling the columns of life-long drive to industrialise Russia. How the plate came to Poti, miles away, probably will never be known.

ASTOUNDING SCENES WITNESSED IN LONDON DURING JUBILEE

GREAT MULTITUDES REJOICE

DEMONSTRATIONS OF LOYAL AFFECTION

"PROUD AND LOVELY PIECE OF PAGEANTRY"

London, May 6.

THE stately Jubilee Royal procession to the Thanksgiving Service at St. Paul's Cathedral in London and back to Buckingham Palace after the ceremony was witnessed with delight by a great multitude of happy people, acclaiming with deep affection their beloved King and Queen, was one of the high-lights of the celebrations in the capital city.

At St. Paul's Cathedral the King and Queen, accompanied by 40 members of their family and in the presence of 5,000 of the leading citizens of the nation and the Empire, joined in a service of thanksgiving for the blessings of their 25 years' reign.

In London, the heart of the Empire's tribute, tens of thousands—many of whom had stood all night in the streets—acclaimed their Majesties with the greatest demonstration of love and loyalty the capital has ever known.

Royal weather graced their Majesties' progress. The day was the warmest of the year, and unbroken sunshine gave the utmost colour and gaiety to the decorations in the metropolis and in every city, town and hamlet throughout the country.

Vast crowds surrounded Buckingham Palace all day and until late at night.

At 9.15 p.m., in response to repeated cries of "We want the King," their Majesties appeared for the third time since their return to the Palace—on the balcony, to be acclaimed by a crowd of between 150,000 and 200,000.

The King commanded the flood-lighting to be turned on, and for five minutes he stood with the Queen, brilliantly illuminated, waving to the throng.

The crowd cheered again and again and repeatedly sang "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

Shortly before ten his Majesty pressed a button in the Palace. At once the great bonfire burst into flame—and a chain of 2,000 beacon fires blazed out on every hilltop in Britain.

Enormous crowds turned the West End of London, brilliant with floodlighting, into a carnival city. Countless millions of the King's subjects throughout Britain and the Empire joined in the rejoicings.

Thunderous Ovation Of Populace

PANOPLY OF UNIFORM

A proud and lovely piece of pageantry that went its way to a thunderous ovation of the people to their King and Queen—that was the great Jubilee Procession. Everywhere the massed onlookers gazed at the triumphantly effective panoply of uniform and weapon that glowed and twinkled in the sunshine of a perfect summer day.

But the climax to all its beauties was in the last half-mile, when the procession came along the Mall, accompanied by a great crash of cheers.

Watchers at the Victoria Memorial gazing towards the distant Admiralty Arch saw a picture of which the frame alone was superb. The lines of tall masts swept, perspective-pulled, inwards to the distant Arch. Their banners, moving a little in the wind, glistened against the new green of the trees.

Lining the edges of London's noblest boulevard were the Guards. Newer had their black and scarlet looked more magnificent. Behind were the eager people in all their thousands.

Mass Of Moving Colour

Right away near the Arch were two blobs of white—the helmets of the Marines. And into this frame, glimpsed at first as a mass of moving colour and shifting pin-points of light in the heat haze, trotted the Cavalcade of Jubilee.

Whatever misgivings had at one time been voiced as to the scope of the procession, no carper in the world could have endured after one glance at that overwhelmingly fine sight. Onward they came, with a swing and a flash, a jingle of harness, a proud tossing of pennant. Full-dress uniforms of the cavalry—

Earlier Glimpses

It was not the King's first sight of the crowds. Shortly after nine his Majesty, dressed in a grey morning suit, stood for some minutes at the window of the Chinese Room, looking out at the vista of the Mall and talking to the Duke of Gloucester. The crowds also caught a glimpse of the King and Queen as they went in to breakfast.

There came a long interval of movement and music. Bands blaring, soldiers and sailors marching into position, latecomers hurrying to their seats.

There is the stage all set for the Royal entry. Along the walls of the Palace the Horse Guards and Life Guards are drawn up, glittering statues.

KING'S MESSAGE TO EMPIRE

"They Are Coming Home"

The following message to the Empire was spoken by His Majesty at the levee held at St. James's Palace:

"There is a word which gladdens me, more especially when I hear it used by friends from overseas, many of whom say when they visit this country that 'they are coming home.'"

"It is in this spirit that the Queen and I meet you to-day, you who represent the vast territories of the Dominions, Colonies, and the Protectorates, my peoples of India, and the dwellers in countless isles of the sea from the Pacific to our own home waters."

"We greet the Prime Ministers of the Dominions, now equal partners in the Empire, and I thank them for the addresses from their Parliaments which they have handed to me. We welcome one and all to our home."

"Eventful your visit cannot fail to be—I trust that it will be happy also. And when the time comes for you to return I would ask you to take back, each to his own people, a message of affection to every member of this great family of which I am so proud and thankful to be the head, and a message of deep gratitude for the loyal and kind words which you have spoken on their behalf."

An Inspiration
"You all who are here to-day and who hold responsible positions will best know what an inspiration and encouragement your words are to me to continue the task which 25 years ago I set myself to do. Before I succeeded my father, the Queen and I had the privilege of studying at first hand the Dominions overseas and India. We were fellow-travellers, then as now, comparing notes and sharing impressions."

"We treasure these memories and keep them alive. Moreover, what we forget our four sons are now able to recall. Many years before our happy partnership began, I had, as a midshipman, sailed the Seven Seas; I realised early that the Empire has many climates, but one spirit."

Unique Gathering
"I regard this as a unique gathering where we can tell one another of our successes and also of our failures and mistakes. But there will be no sharp criticism nor vain regrets, for we are in sympathy one with another, conscious that we have acted according to our lights for the good name and ordered prosperity of the family."

"We are sometimes told that we are lacking in logic, our political institutions loose and undefined. But I look back on the trying and testing time through which we have passed, and wonder whether a less flexible system would have withstood the strains to which we have been subjected."

With common sense and good will as our shield and buckler, we have kept, in spite of all difficulties, our heritage of liberty alike for the individual and for our many constituent races.

"The numberless and invisible ties of sentiment and tradition which bind us together are indeed delicate, but many strands make a cable strong to bind in times of adversity."

It is my prayer, no less than my firm belief, that this bond of the spirit may prove also the bond of peace.

"Some of you are, with a few happy exceptions, about my own age. I pray for the continuance of God's blessing on your labours. With His help I will work on with you in the years that remain for that object which has ever been next my heart—the welfare of the Mother Country, of the Dominions overseas, and of India, their happiness and their good repute."

KING'S REPLY TO DIPLOMATS

His Majesty Deeply Touched

The King's reply to the foreign diplomats, who had presented His Majesty with an address of congratulation, was addressed to the Brazilian Ambassador, Doyen of the Diplomatic Corps. It was as follows:

"The warmth and sincerity of the congratulations and good wishes which you have just addressed to me in the name of the diplomatic body accredited to my Court have deeply touched the Queen and myself."

"It is particularly gratifying to me that these words should have been pronounced by one whose long residence in London and whose well-known friendship for my country have won for him an especial esteem, not only as an individual but as the representative of a great and friendly republic with which our relations are and have always been peculiarly happy."

Your Excellency has rightly called attention to the gradual increase in the number of States represented at my Court. It is a pleasure to me and I hope a happy augury for the future, that envoys from every quarter of the globe are assembled here to-day in amity and goodwill."

"I have heard it rumoured that among your colleagues my capital is a greatly coveted post. I am indeed happy if that is the case and just as I consider my Court to be singularly well-favoured in respect of the representatives accredited to it, so it will be my unflinching endeavour to ensure that no support or encouragement of which they may stand in need shall ever be lacking."

"Your Excellency, once more I thank you and your colleagues on my own behalf and in the name of the Queen and of my family for your kind expressions of goodwill. I deeply appreciate and heartily reciprocate them, and I pray God that the unity of purpose which has brought you here together to-day may be a symbol of an enduring peace in the world at large."

Scene On Balcony

GREETED BY ENORMOUS CROWD

In response to a clamouring crowd of nearly 200,000 at Buckingham Palace on the night of May 6 the King and Queen appeared on the balcony for the third time.

They stood there for 12 minutes—five of them in the glare of floodlights, which the King had ordered to be turned on for the benefit of the crowd.

The jewels of the Queen glittered, brilliantly in the beams of the light. As she and the King waved their hands, the 200,000 yelled themselves hoarse, and spontaneously burst into singing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

The King and Queen had come to the balcony at 9.15 p.m. in response to a united shout of: "We want the King." The 200,000 had then sung the National Anthem with great emotion, and showed that they would not disperse until the King and Queen had appeared.

Never before, not even on Armistice Day or at any of the Royal weddings, had they seen such a throng nor such enthusiastic loyalty. After the King and Queen had returned into the palace, the cheering went on for more than half-an-hour.

Police Swept Away

WILD BURST OF ARDOUR

That balcony of history—in the minds of English people it is inseparable with many landmarks of the King's reign—the declaration of war, the Armistice, the marriages of the King's children. Recollections of crisis and of joy arise from the 25 years that have fled and were with them again at that moment, the greatest joy of all.

The King and Queen appeared there after the return from St. Paul's, and again after lunch. On the first occasion the police the Jubilee celebrations. America was particularly enthusiastic, and the Associated Press, serving over 1,500 papers, employed a specially installed wire to transmit 3,000 words of description. Typical comments include:

His Majesty, who has always been a keen horseman, is here seen returning from a shoot on the moors.

AMERICA

Empire Bonds Of Steel

"This King business may be discredited and on its last legs in other parts of the world, but it is certainly not here. The rejoicing over the Jubilee, the respect and affection shown to the King, this most modest of gentlemen, who has also been a wise king, a good husband and a good father, extended to high and low, rich and poor alike."

"Never in her proudest days has England witnessed the like of yesterday's scenes. The frenzy of jubilation in this staid old city, decked out like a flower garden, did not seem like sober England."

The Empire may be held together by the slenderest link of sentiment whereof the King is the living symbol, but that link, under stress, has proved already as strong as the hardest steel."

FRANCE

Example To The World

"For a quarter of a century, through troubled and tragic times, the reciprocal affection and confidence of the Sovereigns of England and their subjects has never waned. Here is something unique in history—and in fairy tales. Here is a magnificent example for the other heads of State, as for the other peoples of Europe and the universe."

The citizens, great and small, of this so-called nation of shopkeepers have put their country before their money. King George can pass through the streets with his head held high. Never before has the Crown been able to raise itself higher above classes and parties; never before has it played better that martial role which England also wishes to play among the nations."

"In England the Monarchy is not a lapsed institution but a moral force, more vitally alive than ever."

GERMANY

An Empire United

The foreign observer has been overwhelmingly impressed by this celebration which united a whole people, all classes and professions together, and beyond it a world-wide Empire in happiness and rejoicing. The veneration of the Englishman for his Royal Family has a genuinely religious character."

"It was a brilliant success on the part both of the good-humoured police and of the well-behaved public that Jubilee night should have passed off as it did. The police never had to use force."

"The enthusiasm of the English crowd is not, of course, to be compared with the ebullient rapture with which the appearance of the Leader is greeted at gatherings in Germany. Still, doubt cannot be cast on the genuine feelings of these millions, many thousands of whom camp out for 24 hours in the open air to see the procession."

ITALY

"Vitality, Force, Solidarity"

"King George has distinguished himself in British and world history by his profound internal policy and external combativeness, which reveal the vitality and force of the British nation and the solidarity of his monarchy."

"The modern monarchical institution is the creation of English political genius, which has stood the test of time, and grows ever more deeply into the heart of the English people."

AUSTRIA

"Most Beautiful Speech"

"The King's speech was the most beautiful ever delivered by a King. It was a truly Royal speech, just because it was so unroyal. It was the speech of a good man."

The celebrations caused a writer in Le Matin to lament the fact that large ceremonies no longer take place in Paris. "But we are past masters in the art of the funeral," he adds.

Jubilee Babies

HOXTON AND BELFAST FIRST

London's first Jubilee baby was a son born two minutes after midnight on May 6 to Mrs. Janet Elizabeth Barber, the wife of a Hoxton greengrocer.

At the General Lying-in Hospital the first birth was at 12.19 a.m., a son to Mrs. Dorothy-Ansell, of Hanover-gardens, Kennington. Two other babies, also boys, were born in the hospital during the day.

Fascist Plots On The Brain

It would be instructive to know how many people have any suspicion that "the beginnings of the Corporate State" are observable in England. For those who are not aware of their peril, Sir Stafford Cripps has obligingly written a short guide to show where they haunt themselves in the open and where they lurk in dark corners. The leader of the Socialist League boasts that he can detect a Fascist despite the best protective colouring, and his conclusion is that virtually all the measures undertaken since the National Government came into being have had but one deep and sinister design — to make the way smooth for the Corporate State. National Government, he says, is "National" Fascism. There has not been such a nose for a plot since the days of Titus Oates. Mr. MacDonald, Mr. Baldwin, Sir John Simon are all treacherous Fascists in disguise!

When a polite stranger stopped Mr. Disraeli in St. James's street, held out his hand, and said, "Mr. Robinson, I believe," the Conservative leader stared frigidly at him, and then said, "Sir, if you believe that you will believe anything." The three National leaders could fairly make the same retort to Sir Stafford Cripps. At any rate, he is capable of saying anything, for he continually says it, but whether and how he believes it is a matter for his political conscience. When he says that "the regular forces, Army, Navy and Air Force, are being expanded on the excuse of danger from abroad," he insinuates that the pretext is untrue, that there is no foreign danger, and that the real motive of the increase is that "the ruling classes rely for their own protection upon the armed forces of the Crown."

That is to say, Parliament has voted £10,000,000 more on the Services for the better protection of Capitalism and the nascent Fascist State. With the same thumping disregard for the facts Sir Stafford Cripps attributes the reorganisation of the police to the desire "to make the police safe for Capitalism."

So when Territorial recruiting is encouraged and a new Royal Defence Corps is started, the object is not national defence, but "to create the disciplined and subservient mind amongst the workers who join them." They are, he says, "designed as potential defences for capitalists." Sir Stafford would seem to be in grave danger of monomania. If

Mr. Elliot sets up a Pig Board it is done to bolster up the farmer and create "a scarcity market" — for the capitalist. If the Government constructs new roads, the real purpose must be to enable not ordinary traffic but troops and police to move along them more quickly. If they get rid of the slums, it is not for the sake of the town healthier for wicked capitalists to live in. The last election, he says, was "essentially Fascist in nature," and he suggests that the country had only escaped "a formal personal dictatorship" because the National majority was so large that it was not required. The thought of setting up a Dictator never crossed a single responsible mind. But, it haunts Sir Stafford Cripps, for he often harps on the probable necessity of a Dictatorship — purely temporary, of course — when he wins his General Election and starts to suspend the Parliamentary system. It is the would-be parasite of the Constitution — to recall Burke's phrase — who is the would-be Dictator. The only real danger of Fascism in Great Britain would start with his success.

RARE VOLUME STOLEN

But Difficult To Unload

Two men who stole a rare volume of Shakespeare's works in New York gave up trying to sell it and post it back to the police.

But they sent it encased in a tin box. The police were suspicious. They called in bomb experts and plunged the tin in water before extracting the "infernal machine."

All they got was a wet book worth, when dry, about £2,000. Police declared that the thieves must have found the book to be as hard to get rid of as, say, the "Mona Lisa," as it was well known to collectors.

The first complete edition of the works of Sir Isaac Newton is to be published soon.

Enthusiastic scientists will have to know Russian to read it. It is being published by the Institute of the History of Science and Technique of the U.S.S.R. Academy of Sciences and the Soviet State Technical Publishing House.

The fullest edition of Newton's works hitherto published was completed exactly 150 years ago. It was published under the name of Opera quae exstant omnia.

It is scarce and omits important treatises. Most notable of the omissions was "Philosophical Transactions."

The complete works will fill seven volumes.

Photostatic copies of the famous Portsmouth collection of unpublished manuscripts were supplied by the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge.

AMERICAN CAPTURES

Mr. Michael Baleon, production manager of the Gaumont-British Corporation, arrived back from Hollywood recently with two of his American captures—Noah Beery and Helen Vinson.

Mr. Beery, brother of Wallace Beery, has long been familiar as one of the screen's best bad men: his crafty smile, leering eye and booming basso have enlivened scores of otherwise mediocre melodramas, many of them what the trade calls "horse operas."

Miss Vinson is one of the rising stars of the American screen; attractive, sophisticated and pretty. Both she and Mr. Beery (who is accompanied by his young actor son) will appear in the Gaumont-British picture, "King of the Damned," to be directed by Walter Forde.

Little Johnny was visiting in the country and while there became very much attached to his cousin's pet dog. "Haven't you any animals at home?" he was asked.

"Looking for something for nothing I suppose?" "Put it that way, if you like; I was trying to get you a present."

THE ETERNAL FEMALE

City Fathers' Appeal
To Vanity

The city fathers of Taiyuanfu have thought out a remarkable scheme to mark the proper difference between sing-song girls and those who come of good families. It was announced there recently that henceforth all girls must wear a flower badge as well as high heels and must curl their hair. It is thought by such means to encourage the sing-song ladies to do their utmost to develop the present trend in fashion, which will accordingly restrain their sisters who desire to distinguish themselves from being considered professional singers.

Model Of Monument To Queen Victoria

Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyll, has chosen the year of the King's Silver Jubilee to make a most appropriate gift to the Victoria and Albert Museum.

This is a plaster sketch model, executed by herself, of the monument to her mother, Queen Victoria, which was erected in Kensington Gardens, outside the Palace where the Queen was born, to commemorate the Jubilee of 1887. The monument represents the Queen at her accession.

THE CHURCH AND DOCTORS GROWTH OF SPIRITUAL HEALING

MOVEMENT LED BY CHURCH
IN BRIGHTON

(By The Bishop Of Chichester)

I AM anxious to clear up a misunderstanding which may do great harm unless corrected at once.

St. Stephen's Church, Brighton, has lately become a centre of spiritual healing in my diocese with the Rev. John Maillard, licensed by myself as bishop to the charge.

The last thought that I or anybody else had in dedicating St. Stephen's Church to this particular purpose was that thus a new form of quassimedic treatment was being established in opposition to the regular treatment of physicians and surgeons.

A Strong Lead

On the contrary, St. Stephen's Church was designed to give the clearest evidence of the intimate connection between physical health and spiritual health, and of the indispensable partnership between doctors and clergy.

I have not acted as a private individual in this matter, but I have followed up in a practical way the strong lead given by the bishops of the Anglican Communion at the Lambeth Conference, 1930.

Then 300 bishops from all parts of the world declared their conviction that spiritual and physical treatment are complementary to one another and equally necessary for true well-being, and as a consequence of this that there is an urgent need for co-operation between clergy and doctors.

It is common knowledge that the physical and the spiritual and mental are nearly allied — and that there is often a spiritual cause for both mental and physical ills, which has to be treated by spiritual means.

"A Terrifying Thing"

The interdependence of spiritual, mental and physical is emphasised by the conditions under which modern men and women live.

At the annual meeting of the British Medical Association at Eastbourne (in the Chichester Diocese) in 1931, Dr. Leonard Lockhart, medical officer of Messrs. Boots, spoke of the background of industrial civilisation as itself suggesting causes for a great deal of modern ill-health.

"The vast machine of modern life," he said, "is at times a terrifying thing."

He described the many difficulties with which previous generations had not been called to contend, and referred to the widespread feeling of inadequacy to life caused by such forces as unemployment, the mechanical displacement of labour, the competition of girls with men, the economic difficulties in the home, and so on.

This feeling of inadequacy is, as he pointed out, liable to be rationalised in consciousness as illness rather than to be acknowledged frankly for what it really is, namely, a fear of the unknown and intangible.

Thus, the difficulties of both doctor and patient are increased by the anxieties and worries of this very difficult time, even in respect of purely physical diseases.

So it comes about that when man finds himself thus in the dark, a prey to fear and neurosis, there is a demand for a new set of values against which to place, compare and judge new needs, new satisfactions, and new frustrations.

And he added: "Here the Church can help to set him on his feet, show him the way to develop a dynamic religious philosophy of the simplest kind, and by restoring his morale encourage him to spiritual growth and mental health."

Faith in God

I quote this statement by a thoughtful doctor to show how clear it is that doctors are alive to the spiritual side of the causes of ill-health; for there are many other doctors who could be quoted to a similar effect.

And it is an equally interesting point that the eminent psychologist, Professor Jung, in his book, "Modern Man in Search of a Soul," writes that among all his patients over thirty-five years of age there has not been one whose problem in the last resort was not that of finding a religious outlook on life.

Every one of his patients fell ill because he had lost that which the living religions of every age have given to their followers, and none of them has been really healed who did not regain his religious outlook.

Another Ministry

Now it is this faith in God and the awakening or reawakening of this faith which is the foundation principle of all spiritual healing.

As I said publicly at the time, when commissioning the Rev. John Maillard to take charge of the work at St. Stephen's, Brighton, the ministry of the Church is a ministry for the whole man; and there is a special ministry which trained clergy of the Church may exercise side by side, and in full accord, with physicians and surgeons.

It is called the ministry of spiritual healing, which includes both the healing of the spirit and the healing of the body, the healing of the spirit being primary. At its base lies the faith that the power to exercise spiritual healing is the natural heritage of Christian people who are living in fellowship with God, and is part of the ministry of Christ through His Body the Church.

It is a ministry which works above all, in reliance upon God, and therefore one in which prayer, and especially the prayer of intercession, has a special part.

I would only add that two points must always be remembered with regard to the ministry of healing. In the first place, religious treatment of bodily illness must be related to other methods of treatment; and, secondly, religious treatment it seen to aim at something more than the cure of bodily illness, and to have in view the restoration of the patient's whole nature.

Co-operation

This double distinction must be borne in mind throughout. For the fruitful prosecution of the ministry of healing mutual confidence is essential.

There is in existence a permanent committee of doctors and clergy which meets from time to time under the chairmanship of the Bishop of Winchester for mutual consultation in these very matters, and for co-operation.

There is also abundant evidence of steady co-operation between doctors and clergy in different parts of the country.

A Lambeth Conference committee, reporting a few years ago, after careful conference with representatives of different healing societies working within the Church, said: "We found no cases in which those who were practising spiritual healing did not desire to work with the medical profession."

No Antagonism

With regard to the co-operation on the side of the medical profession I would simply say this: I know a good many doctors in London, to-day. The Silver Jubilee year of the King's reign also holds His Majesty's 70th birthday, which will be celebrated throughout the Empire to-day, and on this occasion the list of Birthday Honours conferred is more comprehensive than usual. During the campaign Dr. Ts'o hardly saw his office or his home, his hours being spent visiting Chinese in the lowest quarters, explaining with infinite patience and tact the benefits of vaccination. His efforts were rewarded, and the campaign was fully successful.

Not only has Dr. Ts'o benefited the Chinese in the Colony, but through his wide influence over them, he has frequently assisted the Government, the most notable occasion being during the big strike of 1925 when, although the majority of the local Chinese kept indoors, he worked daily at the City Hall, in view of all as Labour Controller. His efforts in enlisting volunteer labour, organising and forming street guards and raising a special Chinese Police Force, did much to preserve peace in the Colony and to bring about a rapid return to normal conditions.

Although now taking no part in active sports, Dr. Ts'o was at one time a keen footballer, playing for Cheltenham College. He was also an excellent gymnast and athlete. His chief recreation now, in the few moments he gets to himself, is a friendly game of mah jong, while he is a keen reader, particularly of Chinese literature.

He is an M. A. of Edinburgh and a B. A. of Oxford.

Called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1908, he was, four years later, appointed an Assistant District Commissioner in Nigeria and from 1914 to 1922 served as Police Magistrate in Lagos, becoming Solicitor-General of Nigeria the year following. Three years later, in 1925, he was transferred to Trinidad and Tobago and in 1927, while serving in this capacity, was created a K. C.

His next step took him back to Africa, but to the East this time instead of the West, when he was in 1929 appointed Attorney General of Kenya, whence he was transferred to Hong Kong as Chief Justice.

In the same year he returned to Hong Kong, and was admitted as a Solicitor of the Supreme Court of Hong Kong. He is now head of the firm of Tso and Hodgson, his partner being a former Crown Solicitor.

Few men in the Colony have a wider range of interests than Dr. Ts'o, and it is not surprising that he finds little time for recreation or for hobbies, but as he would explain, his activities are his hobbies, and fill the larger portion of his life.

MANY RESPONSIBILITIES

Among his present responsibilities are the following positions: Member of the Legislative Council, Member of the Board of Education, District Watch Committee, Advisory Board of the Tung Wah Hospital, Director of the Po Leung Kuk Court of the Council of the University, Council of St. Stephen's College, Council of St. Paul's College, Board of Control of St. John's Hall, Board of Control of Morrison Hall, Council of the Church Missionary Society's Associated Schools, Secretary of the Chinese Permanent Cemetery, Vice-Chairman of the Chinese Public Dispensaries, Chairman of the Western Public Dispensary, Supervisor of the Tsan Yuk Maternity Hospital, Chairman of the Alice Memorial Hospital, Chairman of the Mu Sang College, Honorary member of the Hong Kong Chinese General Chamber of Commerce.

Hon. Commissioner of the Police Reserve, Vice-President of the Rotary Club, and member of the Sanitary Board, representing the Chinese, since 1918.

Dr. Ts'o's chief interests are the welfare of the Chinese from the health and educational point of view, his object being to preserve and improve their physical condition, and to equip them to meet the demands of modern life.

VACCINATION CAMPAIGN

One of his greatest services to the health welfare of the Chinese was his institution of the Vaccination Campaign, in collaboration with Dr. Woodman, in 1915 and 1916, and it can be said that it was largely due to Dr. Ts'o's activities that there has been such a considerable decrease in small-pox in the Colony during the past two decades.

During the campaign Dr. Ts'o hardly saw his office or his home, his hours being spent visiting Chinese in the lowest quarters, explaining with infinite patience and tact the benefits of vaccination. His efforts were rewarded, and the campaign was fully successful.

To-day's Short Story.

Knight Errant

By A. P. Garland

"JUST like 'Old Ironsides,'" commented Larry Toner, as he read the paragraph aloud to a friend in the bar of the Memphis Club. "He doesn't say how much the reward is going to be. I guess it will depend on the type of person that rolls up with the dog."

Peter Fawley had another sip at his gin-and-tonic.

"You're very exhausting, Larry," said he. "What's it all about? Who is Old Ironsides, and why and how the dog?"

"Old Ironsides, Peter, is Sir James Goodie, shipowner, financier, built-billionaire, and what not. They call him Old Ironsides, because, as you may imagine, he's loaded down to the Pimms line with the milk of human nature. Some say that he's bequeathed his heart to the Diamond-Cutters' Union for them to make tools with."

"I am to take it," drawled Peter, "that the man does not like you?"

"He doesn't even know me," was the reply. "But he's going to this afternoon."

"Go on, Larry. You're dying to tell me all about it."

"I thought you'd be interested. It's like this. I'm trying to give a helping hand to a bloke named Johnson, an ex-something of the R.A.F. He's been five years working in one of the Goodie branch offices, and he got muddled in his accounts. Seventy-five quid or so short. And he's been accused of embezzlement, though his wife tells me he's innocent, and I believe her. He knew me of old and he told her to come and ask me if I could do anything for him."

"What do they take you for—Jack the Giant-Killer?"

"I know," said Larry. "Old Ironsides is a tough bird to tackle. But I found out his weak spot. I read somewhere that he was passionately devoted to his pet fox-terrier."

"Now you know how a man gets attached to a dog. All the more if he's an elderly widower with no kids, like this fellow. It means a lot in his life. So I pinched the little chap."

"You what?"

"What I said. I pitched the dog. The old man lives in a barrack with a huge garden and it was easy to snaffle the little terrier. I have him now in a place where Goodie can never find him."

"But what's the idea?"

"It's this. From what Johnson's wife told me, they've got the goods on him, though he never meant to defraud anybody, and if he's tried he'll probably be convicted and ruined for life—you should hear that poor little woman. She was broken-hearted. So I told her I'd do my damndest to save her hubby from this old sweater."

"How?"

"Well, if Goodie doesn't release Johnson and all that, he'll never see his pet dog any more."

"That certainly ought to make him think things over," said the other lazily. "Good hunting, Larry. I'm no Saint George myself, but I do like to see a millionaire get it in the neck."

Sir James Goodie, an elderly man with grey, unsmiling eyes, rose from the desk in his study and asked Larry to sit down.

"You've come, I understand, in reference to my advertisement for a lost dog," said he.

"That's it," said Larry. "I've got the little chap carefully parked away."

"Parked away? Why didn't you bring him along?"

"Because before doing that I want to talk over terms."

Sir James stirred impatiently in his chair.

"Terms?" he repeated.

"Yes. You see, I stole your dog."

"You admit you stole him?"

"Yes. I hovered around one whole afternoon waiting for a chance. Then it got dark and I snaffled him and took him away in my little car. It was simple. I'm rather good with dogs, you know. I'm one of the new chaps that can stop a dog-fight with their naked hands."

The eyes of the millionaire contracted.

"You are taking this in a rather light-hearted way, Mr. Toner," said he. "You assume that I'm going to pay you a reward for bringing back a dog you yourself have stolen?"

"Who said I was bringing him back?" said the young man haughtily. "I never did."

The other looked at him keenly.

"You admit you stole the dog," said he, "but that you're not restoring him to the owner?"

"Don't misquote me, please," said Larry. "I'm ready to restore the dog—but on my own terms."

The older man slowly reached for the telephone directory which lay on a shelf beneath his desk.

"If you're looking for Scotland Yard," said Larry, "the number is Whitehall one-two-one-two. But the local police ought to do for a job like this. 'Dial O' and ask the operator for a con."

Sir James replaced the directory. (Continued on Page 10)

A further shock of forty-five seconds duration was experienced at Quetta, Baluchistan, yesterday afternoon, and the hills to the East and West were enveloped in an impenetrable cloud of dust. Many of the walls which had survived the previous earthquake were shaken to the ground. It is believed that only slight further damage resulted, however, since unfortunately few buildings had remained after Friday's earthquake.

Complete control of the area is in the hands of the military and martial law has been declared. Both the British and Indian troops have been ceaselessly engaged evacuating the living, bringing out the dead from piles of wreckage, blowing up specified areas to prevent the spread of disease, and organising the relief for thousands of Indian refugees.

The military have now sealed the whole city as well as the railway. Five refugee trains left Quetta on Saturday and six had been arranged for yesterday.

The latest estimate of the British deathroll places the figure at 200, with a further 200 British residents injured. It is still impossible to estimate accurately the native casualties, but unofficial figures vary between 20,000 and 30,000 for the whole of Baluchistan.

It was stated on Saturday night that the soldiers had recovered 2,000 bodies from the debris at Quetta.—British Wireless Service.

CHANNEL BUOYS

WHAT would modern navigation do without the channel buoys—those floating markers that keep ships off the shoals? In a very real sense, the advertisements in this paper are channel buoys, placed for your protection—for the safeguarding of the family expenditures.

These advertisements are the signed statements of reputable firms who seek your patronage on the single basis of giving value for every dollar spent. They are honest statements, the only kind an advertiser can use and remain an advertiser.

People who get the most for their dollar in the market-places are those who keep an eye on the channel buoys. Day by day, they follow the advertisements to learn what and where to buy to the best advantage. Make this a habit. Study the advertisements, in the interest of shrewder buying.

The advertisers in this paper have charted the channels of buying for you. Keep to the course.

manner remained completely undamaged, not one child in the convent being injured. Some 20,000 British as well as Indian troops are now engaged in rescue and salvage work. Until now they have recovered 1,600 hundred native and 300 European corpses, which were immediately burned to prevent the outbreak of an epidemic. Some 27,000 natives are still missing or are severely injured. The entire district has been put under military control and nobody may leave or enter Quetta without permission.—Trans-Ocean Service.

Apprehension is being felt concerning the possibility of a fanatic's act in precipitating a crisis in connection with good will visit of U. S. S. Augusta (below), flagship of the Far Eastern squadron commander, Admiral F. R. Upham (right) to Japan coincident with the American Fleet maneuvers in the Pacific. On a similar goodwill visit to Havana during a period of strained relations between America and Spain, the U.S.S. Maine (top) was destroyed under circumstances never satisfactorily explained, and the Spanish-American war was set off. A recent best-selling novel in Japan pictured war being started by the act of a Japanese blowing up an American warship in the Orient. The sale of the novel in Hawaii was prohibited by the American authorities.

But the first Jubilee baby of all was probably Bridget McGibbon, born at Belfast one minute after midnight. The Lord Mayor sent her a gift a few minutes later. Mrs. Blakely, of Tates-avenue, gave birth during the day to a daughter, who will be named Georgina Mary.

Gift Of $10

The first Jubilee baby at Heywood (Lancashire) was a son born at 12.15 a.m. to Mr. and Mrs. Chadwick, of Peel-lane. They will receive $10 from Alderman J. S. Hargreaves, three times Mayor of the borough, who promised that sum to every boy born in Heywood on May 6.

Liverpool's first Jubilee baby was a son born in the Maternity Hospital three minutes after midnight to Mrs. Margaret Tierney, of Donovan-terrace, Liverpool, who said the boy would be named George.

A son was born early in the day at Dean Farm, Stewkley, Leighton Buzzard, to Mrs. George Bliss.

Twins born in a maternity home at Barrow-in-Furness (Lancs) just before noon to Mrs. Sibeter, are to be named George and Mary. They will be presented with Jubilee medals by Barrow Corporation.

A son was born in the Maternity Hospital, Wake Green-road, Birmingham, two minutes after midnight to Mrs. Moore, of Sparkhill. He will receive a silver spoon from an anonymous donor.

Stand Collapse

MANY PEOPLE INJURED AT NEWCASTLE

Fifty-eight persons were injured — 18 of them so seriously that they were detained at the Newcastle Infirmary — when some staging collapsed at the south end of the Town Moor during the Jubilee celebrations.

Thousands had flocked to the Moor for a Royal salute of 21 guns, taken by the Lord Mayor.

A portion of the Moor was reserved for the forthcoming Royal Show, and though a warning was given by an official, a crowd of men, women, and children, numbering over 200, clambered on to one of the half-completed wooden cattle sheds to obtain a view.

The shed had no roof, only the open beams being in place. It was evident that such a structure could not bear the weight put upon it, but the spectators in their eagerness did not appear to have realised this. Suddenly, before the salute started, the woodwork gave way, and people were pinned under fallen pieces of timber. Ambulance men and police rushed to the scene and extricated the injured, woodwork broken in the crash being smashed up and used as splints.

"Like A Pack Of Cards"

One man who was on the shed said that there were 200 or 300 people on it when it swayed, cracked and collapsed like a pack of cards. "The whole mass of people and woodwork came down together. The people fell on top of each other, and lay in a struggling heap on the ground," he said. "As it crashed I heard women and children screaming, and there was a great commotion as the thousands of people on the Town Moor rushed to the scene."

Most of the people fell behind some railings, and rescuers had to climb the railings to reach the injured. Ambulances and cars were occupied for an hour in driving the injured to the infirmary.

The more serious casualties included six cases of injuries to the spine, three of fractured legs, one fractured pelvis, and two fractured collar bones. The staff of the Royal Infirmary were overwhelmed with the task of dealing with the patients.

WEST END SCENES

Families Picnic In Piccadilly

London, in all her long history, has never known a Sunday such as on the eve of the Jubilee.

From the early hours — Oxford-street, following mid-night jams, had its first big hold-up at 6 a.m. — streets and pavements were crammed with a pulsing mass of humanity and cars.

Later, as they were opened, the parks, too, were over-run. At mid-day the Green Park resembled Hampstead Heath on a Bank Holiday.

It looked as though a whole nation were on the move — as though a whole nation were flowing into the metropolis, driven by the common desire: homage to the King and Queen.

Eager, Care-Free Crowds

Often during the day traffic stretched in one mighty, throbbing jam all the way from Trafalgar-square to the Bank. The pavements were black with a shifting, crowd of care-free, eager people.

When the traffic did start moving to cross the road was a problem. It took one observer six minutes of patient vigil before he could dart across the Strand.

Some people had to wait half an hour for a bus. The buses would sail past the stopping points, the conductors shouting "Full right up." It was all accepted with the utmost good nature.

Thousands of cars sported Union Jacks and streamers of red, white and blue. Thousands of cyclists flew the national colours in mini-ture. The customary week-end "rush to the coast" had turned inwards. Every kind and condition of private car was cruising the streets.

Restaurant Queues

West-end cafes and restaurants continually announced "House full. No admittance for the present." Queues formed, patiently waiting their turn for luncheon.

It was a crowd of all sorts — Cockneys, people from the suburbs and the provinces as well as foreigners. Within 10 minutes eight languages were heard spoken in Piccadilly.

Armies of taxis were abroad, their hoods thrown back, and very often people standing up inside waving Union Jacks. The Underground Railways swarmed with people. Piccadilly-circuit station at midday looked like a Saturday evening after-theatre rush.

The first ticket-holder to take a place in a stand was a woman, Mrs. M. Eldridge, of Birmingham. She was in position soon after 10 a.m., facing a 24-hour wait with great cheerfulness and many provisions. "I thought I'd better get here in good time," she said. "My ticket cost a lot and I don't want to take any chances. The time will pass quickly, I am sure."

Mother's Anti-Stray Plan

Hundreds of people without tickets got a thrill by sitting in the stands throughout the day. In the afternoon the stand at St. Martin-in-the-Fields was full.

A woman in Whitehall was accompanied by three small children, all ringing hand-bells. She explained that it was an "anti-straying" idea.

"They keep on ringing the bells," she said. "Then if they get parted from me in the crowd I can easily find them again."

Gigantic "picnic parties" took place at the Victoria Memorial, around the Trafalgar-square fountains and at the base of Eros. Hundreds of people sat dangling their legs over the bases of the statuary and fountains at these points, happily eating their lunch and tea.

Palace Picnickers

Thousands more picnicked about Buckingham Palace and at the edges of St. James's Park. The environs of the Palace were a swarming-mass of people all day.

A crash between two cars at the Quadrant at Hyde Park Corner added to the tremendous congestion of traffic at that point.

A man in immaculate morning dress attracted much attention in the Mall — he had a Union Jack wound round his top hat.

Many extra police were drafted into the area immediately north of Oxford-street. They used Wigmore-street and prevented cars from turning into Oxford-street.

Traffic lights in such areas as Portman-square were switched off.

CITY DARKENED BY CENTIPEDE

Light Failure Three Nights Running

Peshawar, N.W. Frontier, India.
Peshawar City was recently thrown into darkness by a centi-pede.

For three successive evenings the city lights failed. On each occasion a breakdown occurred at the electric power station. Experts could not detect the cause.

All their investigations, even to a rapid inspection of underground cables, failed to explain the mystery.

Then on the fourth night a linesman found a centipede on the wires which were carrying the electric current to the city.

A number of its legs were singled. This was taken as sufficient evidence of its previous expeditions.

mid-street traffic pylons were moved aside, and police and special constabiles took full control.

Loyalty In Free State

60,000 PEOPLE SUBSCRIBE
TO JUBILEE GIFT

More than 60,000 persons subscribed to the "secret" Jubilee gift to the King and Queen from the people in the Irish Free State.

Canon Luce, in a sermon at Trinity College, Dublin, said:

"To forsake a king is a step towards forsaking God. In a world seething with neo-pagan thought
The King and the far-fung Commonwealth stand like a rock for Christian principles."

Loyalty to God, to Ireland, and the King were cords not easily broken.

STATUES OF EASTER ISLAND

Mystery Claimed To Have Been Solved

A claim to have solved the mystery of the gigantic statues on Easter Island in the Pacific, is made by M. Henri Lavachery, curator of the Museum of Art and History at Brussels. He was a member of the Franco-Belgian expedition which went out to study them last year.

These extraordinary monuments, which vary in height from 15 ft. to 30 ft. and number some hundreds, are not, he says, the vestiges of an extinct civilisation, but the work of the Maori ancestors of the present population who settled on the island between the years 1000 and 1200 of our era.

The statues, he holds, are the memorial stones of mass graves measuring about 250 ft. by 30 ft.

The expedition located 15 of these graves, each of which apparently belong to a separate village.

M. Lavachery says that, in consequence of the ravages of the weather and of the natives, who use the statues as quarries, it is to be feared that after the lapse of two or three centuries nothing will remain of these curious monuments
but formless blocks of stone.

L'intransigeant demands the defence of the "Stress front," which Germany is urging to smash, while the Journal des Debats asserts that the speeches of Sir John Simon and Captain Eden show that the Franco-British declaration of February 3 is now nothing more than a scrap of paper.—Trans-Ocean Service.

SOUTH WATCHES JAPAN'S LATEST ENCROACHMENTS

The Tokyo General Staff has received reports from its numerous military attaches in China saying that anti-Japanese feeling is still rampant. These reports were confirmed by Major-General Kenji Doihara, intelligence officer of the Kwantung Command, who toured South China recently. The General found that there was much talk in South China and elsewhere about recovery of territory lost to Japan.

Japanese reports stating that General Chiang Kai-shek will take steps to recover Manchuria and Jehol when he has unified the country and suppressed the Reds are discredited here, as it is believed that the General has no plan to deal with external problems for some time to come.

Japanese threats in North China are interpreted here as an attempt to expand Manchukuo or to seek its de jure recognition by China. The latest démarche is also intended to hinder the Japanese Foreign Office in elevating the Japanese Legation to an Embassy.

FRED PERRY RECORDS FIRST WIN AT AUTEUIL

Perry stood head and shoulders above all other competitors and was never extended; throughout the tournament he conceded only two sets.

The character of yesterday's play was truly great as Von Cramm went down fighting before Perry, who, playing his speediest game, forced his opponent into numerous errors. The fourth set proved a much closer struggle than is indicated by the score of 6-3, brilliant rallies and astonishing recoveries by both players featuring the final set.

Perry, British hope at Wimbledon and in the Davis Cup, defeated Jack Crawford, the Australian ace, in the semi-final, winning in straight sets, while Von Cramm defeated Bunny Austin, who was tired out after his gruelling struggle against Roderick Menzel in the quarter finals.

Mme. Mathieu eliminated Peggy Scriven, the holder, in the women's semi-final, while Fran Sperling, semi-finalist at Wimbledon in 1933, beat Helen Jacobs, America's No. 1 ranking player. Last year Perry won the Wimbledon, American, and Australian titles, but failed at Auteuil. This year he has lost his Australian title to Jack Crawford.

BABE RUTH ANNOUNCES RETIREMENT

Sequel To Action By Judge Mil Fuchs

ORDERED TO PLAY WHEN HE WANTED TO MEET NORMANDIE

Boston, To-day.
Babe Ruth, the greatest personality in the history of baseball, yesterday announced that he would retire from baseball. After watching Boston Braves play, from the stand, Babe Ruth said he intended to go voluntarily on to the retired list.

"I hate to tell you boys this, but I will not play another game as long as Judge Mil Fuchs remains the head of the team. I've got money enough to live on, anyhow!"

Babe Ruth alleged that Fuchs ordered him to play yesterday, despite his request for permission to go to New York to attend the arrival of the French liner Normandie.—Reuter.

BRILLIANT RECORD

The greatest baseballer the game has ever known, Babe Ruth last year left the New York Yankees, after playing for them for 13 years, and joined the Boston Braves.

In 1921 he established his first home run record with 59 circuit drives and six years later he established a new record with 60 runs.

He has a remarkable record all told—his earnings since his invasion of baseball in 1914 amount to $1,068,477; out of this amount, the sum of $372,900 was salary money, of which $342,000 was paid by the New York Yankees.

He led the home run parade in the American League for 12 years and has scored over 775 home run clouds during his career. He has also batted on six occasions in the World Series, another record.
